I would like the data to be loaded as soon as the callback has been called and not only when the callback returns. I've used the `Task.Run(action);` but it blocks the thread and notifies the callback when the task is completed. I've used the traditional `Action` and then started the `Task` in the callback, which does notify the callback but it also runs the other tasks. I would like the asynchronous task to be completed before triggering the callback. What's the correct way to do this? The modules do work in an m-tom relationship which is why I've given it that name. Lets say we have the following: First module `public class FirstModule { public Task GetString() { Task.Run(async () => { await Mod2Async().ConfigureAwait(false); var`
