A slideshow screensaver that emulates a slideshow screensaver found on newer Mac computers. While zooming in or out, the image alternates between a softer faded screen image and a sharpened screen image. It can also fade between images while zooming in and out. Two or more images, selected from a specified directory (must include.jpg files), can be used as slides. Images are shown in random order. Automatic image rotation is disabled. It runs much faster than the standard screensaver for the machine it is installed to. Easy to install and configure. *Note, this screensaver package won't install onto your network workstation, as the screensaver must be active over a local network connection. If you have a multi-user network, you should be able to use this screensaver over a network computer, but you will not be able to access the installation settings from an outside computer. All images are loaded and unloaded dynamically during runtime, so the program shouldn't take up too much memory overall. It looks really good, but my problems are that it does not fade out, and then gets stuck as the window appears to fade out. You can get it to work if you hit f7 (or another key, but ctrl f7 seems to "fix" it). If you don't use f7, you can often see the last image at the left or top of the screen after the window fades away. This "fade out" as the window closes causes me to have to f7 to fix it. I have this same problem. I also get a broken image or a screen that randomly shows one image, then another after f7 is hit, then the screen is blank for a while, then it shows the second image. I tried clicking the pause and play button and I can see it trying to run the first image 5 times, then it stops. It also does not fade out. I tried using f7 a few times and it says "Begin.. start.. failed..End.. failed" But in the bottom right corner it says paused. The entire f7 cycle can take 10 minutes or more. If you want the slideshow effects, use their slideshow screensaver which is more dramatic. If you don't want to watch the slideshow but just want images to show with screen fade in and out, use my screensaver. I have also found the same problem. It keeps ending in a loop, it

Photo Fade is a slideshow that displays a random image from the chosen directory. It features a soft fade to transition between images, and is very relaxing to watch (depending on what kind of images you've got loaded into it). You can install and configure it just like a normal screensaver, thanks to Network Maestro's screensaver DLL. All images are loaded and unloaded dynamically during runtime, so the program shouldn't take up too much memory overall. Download Photo Fade at www.wilhock.com Thank you! An image slideshow screensaver that (very loosely) resembles what you can get with a photo printer in a photo-specialty store. Images are loaded from a directory.

When loaded, you select whether to show all images, only similar-looking ones, or only photos of people. An "all" button plays a quick-cull/flash-through of all images. A "similar to me" button shows only images similar in style to the currently-selected images (and images of other people, when they're selected). A "photos of people" button shows only images of people (and images of animals, if you tell the program to show them). You can play an "album" or "random" button that plays images every second, third, fifth, etc., or plays images once every time you load the screen. In addition, you can make the slideshow go "in" or "out," by sliding the slider, or you can make it fade to black or white every time an image finishes playing. If you press the space bar, it will pause or stop a slideshow. Images are faded if they need to be and you select that in the "fade to" menu, and the images are scaled (stretched) if you've selected that in the "scale to" menu. You can also preview a slideshow before starting it by pressing the PrSc key. With UPD's Photo Fade (free), not only can you create a slideshow with a randomized directory of images, it's perfect for all you typers out there. You can choose to have the photos rotate, whether to show thumbnails of the images, and so forth. Photo Fade Features: * Create a slideshow of your images * Type-to-text zoom and autocomplete * Photo fade * Random directory selection * Preset directory selection * PNG, JPG and GIF support * Rotate, scale, or crop images b7e8fdf5c8

This screensaver shows random images from a folder. The folder must contain a valid image file and can be either a local or remote folder. All images will be displayed on the screen, regardless of any kind of zoom or zooming settings in the screensaver itself. After logging into my Mac I get a message from Network Maestro stating that Photo Fade is not running at the moment. (The reason is because Photo Fade was not installed when my Mac was booted-up.) I then proceed to log into the Photo Fade screensaver directory and I then select my screen and dimensions, create a password, and start the screensaver, as described in the screenshots below. Screenshot #1: Screenshot #2: The bottom left of the screen has a small control bar. It states that the screensaver is currently disabled, that there is a password, etc. If the password that I have created is correct I am then able to see a countdown. If the password is incorrect, then the countdown progresses and the bottom right section of the screen then flashes the 'Error' message. Screenshot #3: What I have tried: I have completely reinstalled the screensaver (uninstalling it) and tried logging into the screensaver directory and using Photo Fade. I have rebooted the Mac and disabled my firewall (since it seemed to work after rebooting). I have tried running Photo Fade on my other Mac and trying to login (with the same username/password I have set up on this Mac). I have tried using the 'EXE' version of the screensaver and the DLL. I have looked into the screensaver DLL, in an attempt to find out how it disables the screensaver. Do you know if any of this is correct? I would be extremely grateful for any help. latterC 23-07-2005, 04:44 PM Thank you. In fact, it worked. I just tried to run your screensaver and it worked. Although, my screen resolution and dpi are 72, I'm assuming that they would have been your screen resolution and dpi. Thanks for your help. michael1917 23-07-2005, 08:23 PM If the password that I have created is correct I am then able to see a countdown. If the password is
