A: s is a string. You cannot reverse its content, only access to it. You have two options: reversal of the string apply the changes to the original string Reversal If you reverse the string you might encounter a problem. For example, the string 'abc' would become 'cba' When you try to access the string again with index 0 you get the value 'c'. What you get: >>> s = 'abc' >>> s[0] 'c' >>> s 'c' >>> s[0] = 'x' # modifies the reversed string >>> s 'cx' >>> s[0] 'x' # no crash If the string is not reversed, you simply end up with a reversed string. 0cc13bf012

No. 88-1121. United States Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. April 12, 1989. 1 Before ENGEL, Chief Judge, and MERRITT and KRUPANSKY, Circuit Judges. ORDER 2 Edward Parutsky, a pro se federal prisoner, appeals the district court's order denying his motion to vacate, set aside, or correct sentence filed pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b). The appeal has been referred to a panel of the court pursuant to Rule 9(a), Rules of the Sixth Circuit. Upon examination of the record and the briefs, the panel agrees unanimously that oral argument is not needed. Fed.R.App.P. 34(a). 3 In April 1987, Parutsky pled guilty in federal district court to one count of conspiring to distribute cocaine. He was sentenced to imprisonment for twelve years under 21 U.S.C. Sec. 846. He did not appeal his conviction. In November 1987, Parutsky, while incarcerated, wrote two letters to the district court. He challenged in these letters his conviction and sentence on various grounds. The district court determined that the letters constituted a claim for post-conviction relief cognizable under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2255. The court therefore dismissed the complaint without prejudice, allowing Parutsky to file a properly drafted Sec. 2255 motion. He did not appeal this decision. 4 Instead, Parutsky filed a motion in April 1988 in the district court to vacate, set aside, or correct sentence, attacking his conviction and sentence. The district court denied the motion. The court determined that the action was in substance a successive Sec. 2255 motion. The court therefore determined that the motion should not be construed as a Fed.R.Civ.
