Prague has a long history of trade and cultural interactions with Northern Europe. It was one of the first European capitals of Christianity, and the first to be called Charles' Wohnstadt (royal dwelling place) in the 12th century, when work began on Prague Castle. Since then, it became the heart of the Bohemian Crown and declined only with the dissolution of that crown in the end of the 19th century. Contemporary Czech architecture remains strongly influenced by the history of Prague, with several monumental historical buildings, including the National Theatre, the Old Town Hall, the National Museum and Astronomical Clock, and St. Vitus Cathedral. It is a very popular tourist destination, especially during the Christmas period, but it is also a major cultural center. Prague has a number of Western-style theaters and also attracts a great number of foreign artists, including musicians, actors, novelists, painters, playwrights, poets and dancers. It is also a very popular destination for writers, including Franz Kafka, Antonín Dvořák, Karel Čapek, and Čeněk Burian. It is also the home of many avant-garde and Czech experimental theatre troupes, such as Barrandov, Take 35, Free Traffic, Diva Servi, Dunajský spectr, and Theatre Genesis. Many professional rock musicians have also chosen to live and work in Prague, including members of the Czech rock groups Plastic People of the Universe and the New York Dolls.
